Human Resource Management

Skills for a Strategic Role in Business
Today’s businesses and organizations need skilled human resource professionals for effective employee recruitment, training and retention. Meet that need with a Bachelor of Science degree in Human Resource Management from Peirce College.

Knowledgeable HR professionals are in demand. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, overall employment in HR jobs is projected to grow 22% by 2018, much faster than the average for all occupations, as HR personnel take on increasingly strategic roles in organizations.

Enhance your Career Potential with a Human Resource Degree

Human resource employment opportunities continue to grow regionally as well as nationally. Individuals with a strong educational background in HR will be positioned to compete for those roles.

Peirce’s Human Resource Management program provides students with a competitive edge through a solid knowledge of all facets of the profession, as well as business and management, and sound communication and interpersonal skills.

Designed in line with the Accreditation Council for Business Schools and Programs (ACBSP) and Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) guidelines, the program is targeted for those who want to enter or advance in the HR field, or enhance their managerial careers with an understanding of HR principles. Coursework focuses on foundational business principles, law and ethics, with emphasis on all functional HR areas including: employee recruitment and selection; benefits; compensation; labor relations; and training. Students will learn the skill sets necessary to provide expert advice in real-world business settings.

Graduates can expect to enter the profession as HR assistants, recruiters or generalists. Graduates also can prepare for professional and senior professional HR certifications from SHRM, or pursue graduate education.
